A nice selection of Icení silver units from THE SCOLE BOUDICA HOARD

On 9 November 1982 a digger driver, while cleaning up the sides of a trench with a spade, discovered 142 silver coins at Scole House, Scole, Norfolk. A further 147 “were excavated nearby or extracted from the builder’s spoil heap on later occasions,” bringing the total to 289 coins. 202 were Icení silver units, dating from c.AD25; the other 87 were Roman silver denarii, mostly Republican.

The latest Roman coin was a well preserved denarius of Nero, dated AD 60-61, the year Boudica of the Icení rebelled and burned Camulodunon (Colchester), Verulamium (St Albans) and Londinium (London). Dr Andrew Burnett of the British Museum said: “The Neronian coin provides the formal proof that mixed Icenian and Roman hoards, even when they contain no coins later than Tiberius, were deposited during Boudica’s revolt.”

The village of Scole, formerly on the old Roman road to Venta Icenorum (‘market of the Icení’), lies on the north bank of the River Waveney which divides Norfolk from Suffolk, not far from the northern borders of the Trinovantes who joined Boudica in her revolt. Dr Andrew Rogerson and others believe that Scole could have been the site of the Villa Faustini, mentioned in the Antonine Itinerary (Iter V). Roman floors and wall foundations have been found at Scole House.

At a Coroner’s Inquest on 26 July 1983 the Scole hoard was declared Treasure Trove and, apart from four Roman denarii, all the coins were returned to the finders. You’ll find full details of the Scole hoard in Dr Philip de Jersey’s monumental Coin Hoards in Iron Age Britain (see back page). This is a rare opportunity to acquire coins from a well documented Treasure hoard linked to Boudica’s revolt.

For their help we thank Dr Richard Abdy, Prof. Miranda Aldhouse-Green, Dr Adrian Marsden and especially Dr John Talbot.

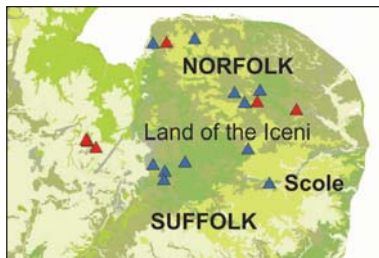

In 1989 Robert Van Arsdell said VA 790-94 (ABC 1564-67) were struck by Boudica in AD 61. In 2001 CR said they weren't. However Dr John Talbot says they could be among the last coins issued by the Icení, some perhaps as late as AD 60.

A Nero denarius dated AD 60-61 (Sear RCV 1936) indicates that the Scole hoard was buried during Boudica’s revolt. This one is from the Fornccett hoard, Norfolk, 1996-97, another Boudican hoard.
